Throughout my career I've had the privilege to work towards science-based natural resource management and the sustainable use and enjoyment of our nation's fisheries resources. Balancing the tremendous social and economic benefits of recreational angling with marine resource needs is an important and often challenging task. In addition to my diverse career background related to recreational angling and science-based fisheries management, my personal passion for saltwater fishing and the conservation of our marine resources provides me with the perspective and experience necessary to be helpful in the development of marine recreational fisheries policies that both maximize angler access and ensure the conservation and sustainability of our marine resources for future generations.
