Background

On April 4, 1968, Senator Robert F. Kennedy had scheduled a speech in Indianapolis, Indiana, during his campaign for the presidency of the United States. Just before giving his remarks, Mr. Kennedy was informed of the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.; he then changed his planned remarks to instead inform the large gathering of Dr. King’s death. In this historic speech, he extemporaneously called upon Americans to embrace non-violence in reaction to the news of Dr. King’s assassination. The site where Senator Kennedy delivered the speech is currently located in a city park established in 1961, and has since served as a community gathering place.

In 1994, the “Landmark for Peace Memorial” sculpture was erected on the site of Senator Kennedy’s speech following a nation-wide design contest for a memorial. Greg Perry, of Franklin, Indiana, won the design competition. The sculpture features the figures of Kennedy and King emerging from solid walls and reaching out toward each other. The City of Indianapolis redesigned the southern half of the park in preparation for the placement of the sculpture. A ceremonial groundbreaking was held on May 14, 1994, and was attended by President Bill Clinton, Senator Ted Kennedy, Ethel Kennedy, Dexter Scott King, Martin Luther King III, and other State and national dignitaries. The memorial sculpture was unveiled on September 30, 1995.

April 4, 2018, marks the 50th anniversary of Robert Kennedy's speech and Dr. King's assassination.

Designation as a national historic site and inclusion in the National Park System typically denote a site that carries national significance in the nation's history. This specific site has primary significance to the City of Indianapolis and the people of Indiana. Inclusion of the site as a unit of the National Park System would incur continuing management, administrative, and maintenance costs to the National Park Service (NPS). In addition, there are liability concerns with a site that would not likely be staffed by NPS personnel.

The Subcommittee on Federal Lands held a legislative hearing on H.R. 4851 on February 15, 2018.
